Federally-Supported Community Vaccination Centers
The Biden-Harris Administration is working to get more people vaccinated by increasing vaccine supply, increasing vaccinators, and increasing the number of places to get vaccinated. As part of this strategy, the Administration is supporting and launching federally-supported community vaccination centers nationwide in community centers, schools, and stadiums. As of February 26, the Administration has announced 18 federally-established community vaccination centers, with the ability to administer a total of 61,000 shots per day at full capacity. For these sites, the federal government is directly working with state and local partners to help select the location for, staff, and operate these sites.

CDC: Decline in Cases Stalling with Spread of New COVID-19 Variants
A U.S. News & World Report article says the CDC is warning states not to relax their restrictions, particularly as new virus variants spread. "Please hear me clearly: At this level of cases with variants spreading, we stand to completely lose the hard earned ground we have gained," CDC Director Rochelle Walensky said during a White House coronavirus briefing Monday. While the U.S. has seen a six-week downward trend in cases, Walensky said Monday that the most recent seven-day average of new cases and deaths showed a roughly 2% increase compared to the prior seven days. The U.S. is currently averaging approximately 70,000 cases a day.
