Next COVID-19 Relief Bill Still Being Negotiated by Congress and the White House

The White House and Congressional Democrats are still deep in negotiations to craft the next COVID-19 relief package today after Nancy Pelosi, White House Chief of Staff Mark Meadows and Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin met this weekend. One major point of contention is hazard pay. While Democrats are hoping to authorize hazard pay for workers making up to $200,000, Republicans want to provide it only for people making close to minimum wage. The parties are also working to make a deal on the Paycheck Protection Program (PPP), funding for schools, nutritional assistance, and a moratorium on evictions. Democrats also want to include money for the upcoming elections and the postal service, as well as $1 trillion for state and local governments. Republicans are focused on the structure of a new round of enhanced unemployment benefits, and the implementation of liability protections for reopening businesses.

Last week, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell released a draft text of the Republican proposal, the HEALS Act. This bill would include improvements to the Medicare hospital accelerated and advance payments programs during the COVID-19 Public Health Emergency and authorize the extension of certain Medicare telehealth waivers. The bill would also provide some lability protection for health care providers. The bill is likely to continue to change, so NHPCO will keep you up to date as negotiations continue.
